FOURTH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT.

Republican Convention.

The Republican Convention of the Fourth Congressional District will be held in City Hall, Bangor, Thursday, April 26th, at 9:30 A. M. for the purpose of nominating a candidate for Congress, two of electing candidates for Electors-at-Large, and Vice-President of the United States, and two delegates, and two alternates to attend the National Convention to be held at Chicago, Illinois, Tuesday, June 19th, 1888, and transacting any business that may properly come before it.

The basis of representation will be as follows: Each city, town and plantation will be entitled to one delegate, and for each seventy-five votes cast for Republican candidate for Governor in 1887, one additional delegate, and for a fraction of such votes in excess of seventy five votes, one additional delegate.

The District Committee will be in session in the Common Council Room at 9 o'clock, on the morning of the Convention, for the purpose of receiving credentials of delegates.

The Next Governor.

One of the most gratifying features of the Republican situation in Maine, is the remarkably amicable manner in which the canvass for the nomination of our next governor is being conducted by the friends of the three gentlemen prominently named in that connection, viz: Governor Sebastian S. Marble, State Treasurer Edwin C. Burleigh, and ex-Attorney-General Henry M. Cleaves. There is also cause for congratulation in the fact that all of these gentlemen are amply qualified and that either would do credit to the party and the state in the office of Chief Magistrate.

The support of any one of them, therefore, involves neither hostility to nor distrust of the capabilities of either of the others, but should be governed by the judgment and preference of individuals or communities as to the most expedient choice at this time.

Governor Marble, who came to the office unexpectedly, and who is performing its duties in the cool, factory manner which extended public experience and known abilities warranted the public in expecting, will in any event enjoy the honors and gratitude of the position for a full year, both was formerly a gubernatorial term. In that time, without regard to the nomination of his successor, he will be entitled to make his record as one of the honored Governors of Maine. Such a record would naturally be the limit of the political ambition of one at his time of life, the mere compliment of a second term would add nothing but standful to the enduring reputation that we are confident he will achieve as a judicious and capable executive.

No circumstances of the situation which materially control in such matters, all at this year strongly to the selection of Hon. EDWIN C. BURLEIGH, as the Republican candidate for Governor. All the conditions favorable to success seem at this time to unite in urging his candidacy, with the exception of the single year of Governor Davis in 1880, the Eastern portion of the State has not furnished a Republican Governor since Israel Washburn, Jr., in 1863. In the past six years the extreme West furnished the Governor for four and the central section for two years, so that all the local considerations are in favor of the East. Of course locality is not necessarily conclusive in such matters, but it is entitled to fair consideration, and this year Eastern Maine has the strongest kind of claim to recognition.

These facts, without any disparagement to the abilities and excellent qualities of Mr. Cleaves, seem to us to furnish good reason for postponing another nomination from Cumberland county, which furnished a Governor from 1882 to 1886, until the next shall have had a representation in the executive chair.

Mr. Burleigh, however, is not a sectional candidate, for while he will undoubtedly go in convention the sub-tantially unanimous support of this section, we know that his nomination is earnestly favored by a large portion of the most prominent Republicans in all sections of the state. While officially located in Augusta the performance of his duties as State Treasurer, Mr. Burleigh holds a residence at Skowhegan, and represents one of the most orderly and influential Republican families of Aroostook. His nomination would, therefore, be a gratifying compliment to that rapidly growing and enterprising county, which will send a solid and enthusiastic delegation with the name of BURLEIGH on their banners.

Of Mr. Burleigh's qualifications it is unnecessary to speak, as no man of his age is more widely known or more highly respected throughout the State. His connection with state affairs as Land Agent and State Treasurer render him familiar with every phase of official duty, and his unblemished character commands the respect of all without distinction of party. His nomination would be regarded with special favor by the younger men of the state, who are fast assuming the burdens of political responsibility, and the cordial endorsement of his candidacy by the honored veterans of the party in all sections, insures that harmonious effort that will give emphatic Republican victory.

While, therefore, we would have the votes cast and cast in a spirit of the utmost good-will, and favor the freest expression of the popular preference of the Republicans of the State, we heartily and earnestly commend the selection of HON. EDWIN C. BURLEIGH FOR THE NEXT GOVERNOR OF MAINE.

Republican Caucuses.

The Republican caucuses last evening were well attended and entirely harmonious. Strong delegations were selected to represent the city at the District and State Conventions to meet here Thursday of next week. The delegation to the District Convention is favorable to the renomination of Mr. Boutelle, and the delegation to the State Convention will unite enthusiastically with the delegates from other parts of the State to the end that Maine has a strong representation in the Chicago Convention in June. This fall the contest is to be the most important for a number of years. The issue between the two great parties is clearly drawn, the one standing on the free trade platform of President Cleveland, the other on a platform of protection to home industries and labor, and on that issue the Republicans are ready to go before the people. With a Standard Bearer representing the choice of the great masses of the party, on a platform in sympathy with the people, a majority of whom, even the New York Herald admits are strongly in favor of that protective system which has developed the resources of the country to a wonderful degree, the prospects for a grand Republican victory are most encouraging.

Democratic Harmony.

In the last edition of the Boston Sunday Globe the Bangor correspondent of that paper took up the political situation in this State from a Democratic standpoint and proceeded to outline the campaign for the "faithful." Starting with the assertion that the party is entirely harmonious and in "better condition for business than for a number of years" he next proceeded to demonstrate the brotherly love that is just now overflowing in the Democratic family by a fierce onslaught upon William Henry Clifford, who wants to go to St. Louis as one of the delegates at large. He refers to this shining light in the Democratic party as the gentleman who "went to Augusta and had himself made the Democratic nominee for United States Senator," declares that he has scooped in all the honors that he could lay his hands upon and closes this striking evidence of harmony with the awful threat that unless he goes into temporary retirement Clifford will not be given the privilege of being knocked down again this fall in the First District by Congressman Reed. Turning next to the gubernatorial question the correspondent trots out the Redman boom, saying the Democrats of eastern Maine are enthusiastic for his renomination.

If any doubt lingers in the minds of the people as to the harmony that prevails in the Democratic party after reading the Globe letter all such doubts will be dispelled by a perusal of another letter from a Democratic correspondent from Bangor in the Kennebec Democrat of this week. Correspondent number two having digested the comments of correspondent number one adds his testimony as to the "harmony" in the party from which we quote as follows:

One of the peculiar things about the Boston Globe's is its nomination of candidates for the Maine Democrats by its correspondents.

Every week it has more or less candidates. This is lucrative for the correspondents, who are all well paid for these little boons by the gentlemen interested.

Just previous to the Democratic Convention in Bangor, two years ago, the Boston Globe was loaded down with personal attacks on Chairman Brown and other live workers in the Democratic party, from its Bangor correspondent, lustigated by J. P. Bass and Redman.

These personal attacks were made for the purpose of securing the nomination of J. B. Redman, and putting down the live men in the party, who stood in their way.

It was considered poor politics at the time, and these attacks resulted just as was predicted in the retirement of Redman and a rebuke to Bass.

These same tactics are now going on again. The Sunday Globe contains a lot of political gossip written in the interest of Bass and Redman, by one of the tools of Bass, but an attack on Hon. W. H. Clifford.

The attack is not only entirely uncalled for, but it is a diabolical in conception, as it would certainly anger the many friends of Payson Tucker here, who favor him as a delegate, who would certainly oppose John if Bass was a manager of his political affairs. As a matter of fact, anything from Bass in favor of any candidate, is a positive injury to the person.

For the part John D. Redman took in going to Washington and placing in the hands of Senator Hale, letters of the Chairman of the State Committee for the deliberate purpose of raising his influence, Mr Redman was refused the nomination for Governor, by the Convention, which he was entitled to, and he is a dead duck.

The eastern Maine Democrats are not for Redman. On the contrary, they thoroughly despise him for his action, while J. P. Bass is not only not mentioned as a candidate, but it is simply impossible for him to get a single delegate from Bangor to vote for him.

Mr Bass knows that he can never be honored by the party, but hopes to see himself an alternate to the National Convention, and persuade the delegate to resign at home.

Payson Tucker will go as a delegate-at-large to the convention, and it is entirely unnecessary for Bass, Redman or anyone else to provoke discord and strife, and injury others by misrepresentation and abuse, thinking to lift themselves into any position thereby.

After reading the above if any one is inclined to doubt the existence of entire "harmony" in the Democratic ranks he must indeed be hard to satisfy.

A FASCINATING GIRL.

BY F. W. ROBINSON.

He went away disconsolately. Twice that day had he gone from the shelter of the International with a heart exceedingly heavy. What a trouble and a nuisance at his years to let the words, or the manner of a girl—a mere child—affect him in this unaccountable way! What was the use of it! What was he thinking about?

Was he thinking too much of Ruth Daly, then?—a young woman who could never think anything of him—who thought so little of him, in fact, that only that morning she had asked if it was his wedding day; strong evidence that she could not have had him on her mind.

Of course that was not likely, he being on his way to fifty and growing fast.

He had never paid her any attention, for that matter; and as for "making eyes," that process was for lunatics under twenty, or fools who went on their way unblushingly and in a chronic state of love. Ah, yes, he was a failure; his scheming had been a failure, too, and she had loved young Todd, after all.

Or, it was more impossible to love that youth—and, upon his soul, he thought it was impossible—than she was worldly and selfish, and was regretting now the chance which she had let slip by her reserve. She had been quietly waiting for young Todd, making sure of his coming presently, and her disappointment at last had been more than she could disguise.

Well, he was sorry, he was vexed, and he brooded until a late hour upon the whole position, and went to bed shrugging his shoulders at the weakness of women—which he had done all his life, for that matter, before he had met Miss Daly. Nevertheless, Maj. Crawshaw did not give up the International; he should do so by and by, but he did not care to part with Miss Daly on bad terms, and he thought he should prefer the final meeting to be pleasant and friendly, so that there might be a fair reminiscence of her forever afterward in his memory. He found it he was getting an old fool—his sister was right in her fears. He was softening with uncommon rapidity. Miss Daly continued grave and distant in her manner—almost as if she owed him a grudge. She was always terribly busy with those abominable account books, and would not look at him except when he entered the counting house, and then it was with so much calm surprise at his appearance—at his impudence in intruding upon the private apartments of the International, perhaps—that the poor major was fairly bowdlerized and discomfited.

He had it out at last, though. The reader is aware he plumed himself on being straightforward. "Miss Daly," he said, one morning, "in what way have I offended you?"

"I have not said you have given me offence," was the slow reply. "I have no right, possibly, to take offence."

"But still you are offended, and you are too truthful a girl to deny it."

"And you too clear-sighted a man not to know what is the cause," said Ruth Daly, facing him suddenly.

The major turned red and then pale. In all his life he had never felt in a more awkward position, but he acted as a gentleman should to a pretty woman. He gave in, and acknowledged his transgressions without attempting an excuse.

"I beg your pardon, Miss Daly, and I am very sorry."

There was so mournful an expression in the warrior's face that Miss Daly was softened at once. This was true contrition.

"Very sorry!" she repeated.

"Very."

"Then I forgive you, major, if a poor girl's forgiveness is of any value to you." She held her hand toward him, and was surprised to find that his was trembling. "You will not let this happen again, will you?" she said.

"Happen again! What do you say?"

"You know—you understand."

"Of course I had no idea that you were fond of him. You did not let on into that secret, Miss Daly," he stammered forth, "or you would have found me still your friend. But as to this happening again——"

The hand was timidly withdrawn; the eyes became larger and more luminous.

"What are you talking about?" she asked, in fresh amazement.

"About young Todd," he answered, "of course."

"I'm not thinking about young Todd," cried Ruth Daly, with a pretty little petulant outburst that really became her. "I never have thought about him. What has he ever been to me but a nuisance?"

"You don't say so!—I am glad—I—Well, then—what is the matter? What have I done?"

"You don't know! Oh, Maj. Crawshaw, what is the use of playing the hypocrite and playing it so badly?"

"I play the hypocrite!" he exclaimed, for heaven's sake, girl, tell me what is my offence."

Ruth Daly looked at him again sharply and steadfastly, but the bright gray eyes of the soldier did not flinch. He had only one idea as to the cause of Miss Daly's reserve, and this being dismissed, he was utterly lost. There was no time to consider a freak cause of grievance at this juncture.

"You have a very bad memory," she said. "Try and think why I am here, and who put me here."

"Oh!" said the major, recollecting on the instant.

"It was you who persuaded Mr. Freshwater to appoint me book-keeper; it was you who persuaded him—who offered to pay my salary, even, and I—I fancied all the time it was my own wonderful talents which had set me in this place. You have robbed me of my independence by this; you have lowered me in my self-esteem."

"I wished to get you away from Battleton."

"At any cost—you," and the tears were swimming in her eyes as she spoke; "but it was for your nephew's sake."

"Pardon me, Miss Daly, but it was for your own," said the major. "I wished to rescue you from a false position—to place you in a different sphere, where, at least, you should not be exposed to the vulgar attentions of a mob. I wanted you to be something better than a waitress, and I—I certainly told Mr. Freshwater you deserved to be."

"And he took your hint, as you were likely to be a good customer," she said, satirically, "as you had influence and many friends. But what could he have thought of me?"

"Thought! If he has even had a thought of you in any way disparaging, I'll knock his ugly head off—by, god, I will!" exclaimed the major, warmly.

"Oh, he has been very kind in his way, and I do not think I have served him very badly; but I must leave the International."

"My dear—young lady," he added, with a jerk, "you will never do so precipitate—you——"

"I have already given Mr. Freshwater notice of withdrawal," said Miss Daly, interrupting him.

"Because I asked him to place you here?"

"Yes."

The major looked still more mournfully at her.

"I suppose it's a proper pride—I don't know," he said, helplessly. "I cannot blame you; and yet I cannot but think you are acting very rashly. And upon my honor," he blurted forth, "you are making me very miserable."

"You!—Why?"

"Because all this is my fault—because—Miss Daly," he said, suddenly, "there is another reason why I placed you here, which no one knows but myself. You may as well have the whole truth while I am about it, and then you can laugh at me thoroughly some day."

Miss Daly did not laugh. On the contrary, she turned very white, guessing the whole truth at once.

"Pray don't say any more," she urged.

"Only that I love you, Miss Daly," said the impetuous major, "and have loved you in my quiet, old-fashioned way ever since I spoke to you on that Sunday morning down in Battleton. Very ridiculous of me, you will think, at my age; but I could not help it. Miss Daly, my life seemed very dull and lonely after I had known you, and there was a faint hope once that you might learn to care for me a little. There, that's the whole truth. Now I will wish you good-day, and take the liberty of saying, God bless you."

He had both his hands toward her, but she did not see them for the tears before her eyes. He stepped and looked more closely into her face, and saw that she was crying.

"Miss Daly, forgive me if——"

"Go now. You are very kind—there is nothing more to forgive. I—Please go now, major, for my sake, will you now?"

He made no further attempt to move her, being too generous a man to desire her to betray herself. He left her standing there, and went out into the street.

"You will go now, major," she answered, putting her hand in his. "You will give me time to think of this—time to consider all you have said. It is like a dream to me at present."

"Not a bad dream—not quite a nightmare, Miss Daly—I say that."

"No," she murmured, with her head averted from him.

"And when will you give me an answer?" he asked.

"To-morrow?"

"In a fortnight's time."

"Good heavens! What an age of suspense!"

"I am bewildered—I did not think—I could not believe—I—Major, will you go?" she said, almost angrily, in her excitement.

"Certainly. Good-day—good-by, Miss Ruth; I am going immediately," and he marched away hurriedly. He was seen no more for a fortnight at the International. He was a brave man, but he had not the courage to appear until his time of suspense was over. And it had been a great suspense, cowering in the shadows of his rooms in the Albany, a nervous and dispirited man, and no one save himself knew what a dreary, dreadful time of probation it was. He had met his heart on Ruth Daly, and it was a heart with only one idea to distract it in its sober middle age. Had he been a younger man, or a man more frivolous, he might have laughed himself out of this in a fortnight; but life had never been a laughing matter with him, and this love was more than a jest.

Miss Daly received him with a sad smile that dropped him to zero; but he was mistaken in his fears. She was very happy now she had made up her mind to say yes. She knew with whom she might trust the happiness of her life, and whom it would not be difficult to love, even if she did not love him already. She accepted him, and never repented marrying a man old enough to be her father. Very extraordinary, but people don't occasionally.

The good folk of Battleton, who relied on the major's flying like a bachelor and a gentleman, and leaving his worldly goods among them all, were very much shocked. At first; but they all recovered by degrees, all but young Todd, who never forgave his uncle, married and settled though he was for himself.

"It was a deuced shabby trick," he once said, "to get me away from the girl, and then marry her bang off, when my back was turned. And little Daly might have known better—and done better, too," he added, complacently. "She had one good chance for herself at the Junction, but she let it go by. Just like a woman, that was!"

Harbingers of Spring!
Crocuses are said to be by the peck. If true, this season has been here for some time, for the farmers say the crow "crosses" have been sitting on the fences waiting for corn planting to commence for some time. Well, as it really is good to spring, we will make special mention of what we deem a seasonable article of foot-wear—Spring Heel Shoes for the Children—and we have them with rafts of other desirable goods cheap.

MR. SMITH'S WILL.

Mr Augustus Maw was such a smart young gentleman that his friends expected great things of him. There are some persons who possess the knack of inspiring confidence without doing anything to warrant it. Augustus had failed to distinguish himself during his scholastic career, yet those who knew him believed in him almost as much as he believed in himself. He was a brisk, bustling little youth, with a high falsetto voice and a consequential manner. He had worn an eye glass and high shirt collars from an early age, and at 17 he would have argued theology with an archbishop or discussed politics with a prime minister. When the time arrived for choosing a profession Augustus unhesitatingly decided in favor of the bar. He had no predilection for the law, but the career of a barrister had the great attraction of leading to the woolsack. Augustus aimed high, but his ambition was not out of proportion to his opinion of his abilities. He was allured by the prospect of becoming Lord Chancellor and Keeper of the Queen's conscience.

Augustus had inherited from his parents a small fortune, which he would be entitled to receive upon attaining 25. There was no difficulty, therefore, about raising the preliminum which was necessary to enable him to leave the dust of the chambers of some successful counsel. Accordingly the aspiring youth was confined to the care of Mr. Retainer, the celebrated equity draughtsman and conveyancer, whose pupils, though depressing in a social sense, always learned to draw particularly neat pleadings and to turn out legal instruments calculated to mystify the most intelligent layman.

After a brief experience Augustus began to have a thin idea that the goal of his ambition was rather more difficult to reach than he had anticipated. His mind that pleading, hard work, perseverance and consolers study were essential ingredients to the success of his schema. Now, Augustus was one of those enterprising youths—there are many of them about—who are in too great a hurry to make a fortune to be able to give time to honest drudgery. He did not exactly abandon the hope of reaching the woolsack, but he resolved not to fritter away his abilities in serving too much for it. He would keep it in view as something worth contending for, but he felt that, meanwhile, it would be as well not to lose any opportunity for advancement in other directions.

Augustus had been very much struck by the fact that, in the course of business, the private affairs of a good many people of wealth and distinction were revealed to him. He was naturally of an inquisitive disposition, and he revelled in the surreptitious knowledge he acquired in this manner. Mr. Retainer had a large connection among collectors of old standing, with rich and aristocratic clients, and, according to custom, his pupils were permitted to try their 'prentice hands in preparing the rough drafts of wills, marriage settlements and deeds of various kinds. It was quite tantalising to Augustus to be behind the scenes, as it were, and to observe the secret disposition of so many thousands of pounds, without profiting thereby. He did not see his way, however, to turn his experience to account, but the idea took possession of him that in this direction he might one day make a discovery which he could utilize to his advantage.

Meanwhile, he grew utterly sick and tired of the law long before the wished-for opportunity arrived. But at length his drooping spirits were revived by what seemed to be a genuine prospect of acquiring a fortune. One day there was handed into the pupils' room a paper of written instructions for the will of a Mr. John Smith, of Hilldrop Crescent, Camden Town, who was represented by a well known firm of solicitors. Mr. Smith appeared to be a gentleman of considerable wealth, for he owned whole terraces of houses in London, broad acres in the country, and stock exchange investments galore. Augustus' attention was attracted by two circumstances, one of which was that this Mr. John Smith was a neighbor of his uncle's, with whom he resided, and the other that the testator had an only daughter, to whom he had bequeathed nearly the whole of his wealth. From the fact that Mr. John Smith resided in the unassuming locality of Camden Town, it seemed probable that he was a person of quiet tastes and habits, to whom it would be easy to obtain an introduction. This done, thought Augustus, nothing would be simpler than to ingratiate himself with the old gentleman, to win the affections of his daughter, and to gain both her hand and her fortune.

To tell the truth, this was not the first time that Augustus had cherished designs of marrying heiresses whose prospects he had learned in a similar manner. Unfortunately, in previous cases the ladies had been of exalted rank and station, which rendered them unapproachable. Disparity of station had not prevented him, however, from making discreet advances. Like all mottled-faced, smub-nosed little men, Augustus considered himself above everything a lady killer. When he discovered that the Lady Angelina Fitzpowderpuff was the residuary legatee under the will of her decrepit old uncle, Lord Towslopate, he had taken immense pains to have her ladyship pointed out to him, and had ogled her in the park for a whole season. Various instances of this kind might be recorded of his enterprising nature, but it would be depressing to chronicle a series of dismal failures. Augustus had borne his defeats with equanimity, convinced that it was lack of opportunities alone which had prevented him from making conquests.

In the case of Miss Smith, however, no obstacles of an insurmountable kind presented themselves. Augustus, with his native sanguineness, therefore regarded her fortune as practically within his grasp. That very evening, in fact, on his return to his uncle's house in Camden Town, he commenced, to make discreet inquiries about the Smith family. Not a word did he breathe of Mr. Smith's fortune, and he was the more cautious because it seemed, that the extent of the will was not generally known. But he learned enough to feel convinced that the old gentleman was a wealthy miser. He was described as a taciturn and rather eccentric person, who had resided many years in Hilldrop Crescent with his daughter and a maiden sister. He was supposed to be comfortably off, for he paid his way and lived at his ease, but he was certainly not suspected of being a millionaire.

Augustus wisely determined to look well before he leaped in this instance, and he therefore set to work to ascertain whether Mr. Retainer knew anything about Mr. Smith and his affairs. Accordingly he laboriously prepared the draft for Mr. Smith's will himself, and ventured to take it into Mr. Retainer's sanctum. The learned conveyancer struck, perhaps, by the unwonted zeal of his least promising pupil, good-naturedly put aside the papers he was engaged upon, and invited Augustus to stand by while he revised the important document. This method of instruction was eminently calling to Augustus, for she

...with edifying meekness, being entirely preoccupied with the momentous inquiries he desired to make. When Mr. Retainer, after a good deal of contemptuous "pishing" and "pshawing," accompanied by violent scratchings of his broad-nibbed pen, threw the document aside, Augustus said, rather awkwardly:

"Do you think the will is all right, sir?"

"All right! No, of course not. It requires to be entirely redrawn. You might have saved your time and trouble, sir, as well as mine!" returned Mr. Retainer, quite savagely.

"I mean, do you think it is a hoax?" continued Augustus, feeling very small indeed.

"You know best, sir!" exclaimed Mr. Retainer, glaring at him.

"If you were referring to the instructions," Augustus hastened to explain, pointing to the document.

"There is nothing the matter with the instructions!" exclaimed Mr. Retainer, staring at Augustus.

"I dare say not, as far as the solicitors are concerned—" Augustus blurted out.

"One of the oldest and most respectable firms in London," interrupted Mr Retainer indignantly. "What on earth are you driveling at?"

"Well, I mean, do you think that the testator has all the property to leave that he speaks of?" said Augustus in desperation. "I have heard of cases of a man making a sham will."

"Not through a firm like Tapo & Parchment," cried Mr Retainer, quite scandalized. "What can have put such a notion into your head?"

"Nothing, except that the testator lives in Camden Town—Hilldrop Crescent. I know Hilldrop Crescent slightly," added Augustus hastily. "They are comparatively small houses, and the neighborhood is not fashionable."

Mr Retainer looked rather amused. He leaned back in his chair a moment and regarded Augustus through his spectacles as though impressed by his shrewdness. Augustus did not hear the remark, very well, for reasons that may be surmised.

"When you are older, Mr Maw, you will learn that it is not always safe to judge by appearances," he said, with a smile.

"Then you think, sir—"

"Do not alarm yourself," interrupted Mr. Retainer, turning impatiently to his work. "Mr. Tapo explained to me the circumstances of the case. It is all right."

"2222 LINCOLN'S INN FIELDS.

"DEAR RETAINER. It was a coincidence, and nothing more. I put in the name of Smith myself, as I my confidential clerk added an address—the first that occurred to him. I know nothing of the Mr John Smith you refer to, neither does he. It was an accident. However, no harm is done.

"Yours very truly,

H. R., PAPE."

"No harm is done, as Mr Tapo says," said Mr Retainer, as Augustus, looking stupidly perplexed, handed back the letter to him.

"I don't quite understand," murmured Augustus, though he perceived well enough that there had been a fatal mistake somewhere.

"It is very simple," explained Mr. Retainer. "A client of Messrs. Tapo & Parchment's—a gentleman well known in society, but rather eccentric—gave instructions for his will, but expressly asked that it might be drawn under a fictitious name, so that clerks and other persons through whose hands the draft might pass should not be able to identify him with the testator. It was a very proper precaution, as I must say," added Mr. Retainer, looking severely at Augustus, "that I thought at the time it was almost tantalizing. However, the result is that none but the confidential clerk who engrossed the will for signature is in the secret."

"I understand you to say that you know all about the testator," cried Augustus, beside himself with vexation and disappointment.

"So I do. The secret was confided to me," said Mr Retainer. "Had you been informed that you know a Mr John Smith of no address given, I should have known you my client. But you merely said you knew the old man."

"I did not know him at the time," blurted out Augustus.

He could have bitten his tongue off the instant after, for he saw he had betrayed himself. Mr Retainer, in a voice of thunder, ordered him out of the room, and Augustus, overcome with humiliation and confusion, needed no second bidding.

The prevailing sentiment which agitated the bosom of Augustus, when he came to consider the situation, was a deep sense of having been cruelly wronged and deceived. The explanation of Mr Retainer's was that Augustus' circumstances had, as we have seen, for a long time caused him uneasiness, and now that it had transpired that the old gentleman was not the owner of the property mentioned in that fatal will, Augustus had no difficulty in convincing himself that his rival's version was correct. Miss Arabella only suspected poor Arabella still her relations of having action paid to inveigle him into matrimony by false pretences, and in his virtuous indignation he did not pause to consider the impropriety of the charge. Acting upon the impulse of the moment, he immediately wrote and broke off the engagement, using expressions of reproach and harshness which poor Arabella had done nothing to deserve.

After this it was particularly galling to Augustus to be condoled with for having missed the hand of an heiress. It turned out, however, when too late to repair the hasty step he had taken, that old Mr. Smith, though not fabulously wealthy, was certainly rich enough to make a most desirable father-in-law. Before Augustus had recovered from the unpleasant shock of this various intelligence, he received a visit from Mr Brittlebone, which resulted in his being swathed in vinegar and brown paper for several weeks. As a reward, apparently, for his loyalty, Mr. Brittlebone had the unobserved satisfaction of leading Miss Arabella to the altar, but this was not until the persecuted Augustus, in the unenviable capacity of defendant in an action for breach of promise, had been mulcted in heavy damages, which enabled the young couple to start handsomely in business in the hardware line.—Truth.

An Artist on the Sidewalk.

I saw recently a scene that might well inspire a master of delineation by imitation. It was in the broad part of Fourteenth street, near Fifth avenue, time, 10:30 p. m., a rather tall, spare young man. He had spread two newspapers on the sidewalk just where the glare from an electric light was the strongest, and on them had laid his attractive way of possible five cent icecream known, I think, as cocoanuts. They were very cheaply made of a material that resembled oil cloth. As I approached he was stooping over and adjusting his wares. Then he rose, looking neither right nor left, but steadily at his display, and thoughtfully withdrew a few feet into the shade to study the effect. He stood erect, his chin slightly depressed, right arm akimbo and the left hand gently rubbing the side of his face, the picture of perfect self forgetfulness. I could not help smiling.

After a moment he stooped over the newspapers again, moved one or two of the "cocoanuts" slightly, then withdrew to the shade and viewed them from another quarter, now and again rubbing his cheek gently. Finally, finding the effect artistically good, he dropped his hands to his sides and looked up with a slight smile, and hopefully waited for customers. He had been so preoccupied and evidently so interested in his work for the work's sake, like a true artist, that I had not been able to repress my smile, but it now occurred to me that probably that shabby array represented his entire stock in trade, upon the successful disposition of which depended perhaps his lodging and breakfast, perhaps a delayed supper as well, and a great pang went through my heart as I left him, hopeful and apparently cheerful, to find a customer if he could before morning.—"Uncle Bill" in Chicago Herald.

Two Rooms at the White House.

The young wife's room is the scene of continued gayety during the hours when the president is attending to affairs of state. How different the apartment which adjoins it on the west! Visitors have often noticed that this room is never opened. The curtains are tightly drawn, and no one ever thinks of crowding its threshold. It was in this room that Garfield lived for months, tortured by Assassin Guiteau's bullet, while a nation hoped and prayed for the recovery that never came. The room is almost precisely as it was the day when Garfield was taken from it and carried to Elberon, where he breathed his last. President Arthur had a horror of the place. He gave orders that it should remain untouched as long as he was in the White House, and these orders were strictly obeyed. President Cleveland has said nothing upon the subject as yet, but it is understood that he, too, is loath to break the silence of that room.—Boston Traveler.

Transplanting Skin from a Frog.

Skin from the back of a frog has been used by Dr. O. Petersen for fastening the healing of wounds. Grafts of the skin of the thumb-nail were caused to adhere firmly in two days, and in two days more the pigmentation of the transplanted skin had almost disappeared. The resulting cicatrice is of great softness and elasticity. Some of the Berlin hospitals are now beginning to employ frog's skin as grafts in place of other skin.—Boston Budget.

King Ludwig's Favorite Beverage.

The late king of Bavaria's favorite beverage was a mixture of white wine and champagne, prepared in a bowl with a thick layer of fresh, strong-scented violets floating on the top. The violets gave a delicious perfume to the mixture, much to the king's taste, although it was so fond of scents that the air around him was generally redolent of perfume. This fancy cost him quite $10 daily.—Boston Transcript.

Business Notes.

Mrs. Chas. Sullivan, Hyde Park, Mass., writes: "I have used Ayer's Cherry Pectoral for a bad cough, and find it the best medicine I could get. I have been troubled for years, but Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is the only one that ever did me any good. I shall always keep it in the house."

...RTLAND TRAGEDY.

Murder and Attempted Suicide.

A Hallowell Lady and a New York Drummer.

PORTLAND, April 20. Yesterday afternoon Edward H. Chase, of New York, shot and instantly killed Mrs. Ida Stevens. From all that can be learned Chase and the woman were old lovers. A letter found on Chase showed that he is a son of Dr. E. P. Chase, of New York City, that he came here a week ago with his mind made up to part on earth for the last time Mrs. Stevens, who had agreed to be in the city during the Methodist conference; that at last they were to part forever but afterwards his heart having failed him he decided to commit the deed. The letters were addressed to his wife and children explaining the case, but Mrs. Stevens was the only woman he ever really loved, that he could see now longer as he had lived and that he wished them to forget his name.

They met at the Union depot, she having a few moments good bye to take the 5 o'clock train home for Gardiner. They walked about the depot some time, talking earnestly, when suddenly he drew a revolver and

Shot Her Dead

Then turning over her he put a bullet almost through his own head but did not inflict as fatal a wound. He was prevented by citizens from shooting himself again.

The woman was handsomely dressed. She is the daughter of ex-Mayor Ladd, of Gardiner, wife of Samuel Stevens, of that city, and niece of Rev. A. S. Ladd, one of the most prominent Methodist Ministers in Maine. Her age was about thirty-two years. She left no children. Chase is a commercial traveller.

It is said that the woman was ready to die with him an extract from a letter to his parents says:

"We are for death to separation. Good

Mr. Stevens' brother arrived here this morning from Gardiner. The coroner's jury will be held this forenoon and the body will be taken to Gardiner at noon. It appears that it is reported at Gardiner last night and hoarded near where Mrs. Stevens lived. He became infatuated with her but it is not thought there were any improper relations between them.

Mrs. Stevens has been here for some days at the home of her aunt, Mrs. Jessie ... on Congress street. It is supposed that she refused to submit to his proposals and out of rage and jealousy Chase committed the deed. He is now at the hospital and there is every chance that he will recover, the wound not being dangerous.

An Autopsy

was held by Dr. Smith, and a bullet could was found in her head, the track of which could be completely through the base of the brain, from side to side. The bullet entered the right side of the head and passed out on the other side.

Among Mrs. Stevens' effects that were in charge by Coroner Hall was found a letter from Chase, in which he said he hoped to meet her at the Congress street ... road station on the fatal day. This appointment that she kept was the last.

Mrs. Stevens' Remains Brought Home.

AUGUSTA, April 20. The remains of Mrs. Ida M. Stevens, of this city, who was shot Pourday at the Congress street station, Portland, arrived on the afternoon express and were taken to the home of her father, ex-Mayor Joseph Ladd, Spring street. Mrs. Stevens married her husband ... years ago. They lived together in this city until last fall, when they moved to ..., the wife returning to the home of her parents. A suit for divorce from the bush and was commenced by Mrs. Stevens at the February term of court, ... county, and is now pending. Chase, the alleged murderer, is a stone cutter here, having worked a few months last season at the shop of Moore, Brown & Co., carpenters and builders. While in the city he boarded with Mrs. Stevens. He man is well spoken of by his employers and those who knew him. He was ... divorcing man. Chase is reported to have a wife and two children living in Liverpool, in this State.

Henry B. Cleaves as the Republican candidate for Governor. Going from the farm to enlist in the army as a private, a brave soldier in time of war and danger, a faithful public officer who labored for the interest of the people and tax payers in sustaining the rights of taxation against the railroad corporations of the State, and in the enforcement of all the laws, always an earnest Republican from the time he cast his first vote in the army for Abraham Lincoln, devoted to the interests of the people and his native State, we commend him as a strong and proper candidate and worthy of the confidence of the Republicans of Maine.

BURGLARY AT PEMBROKE.

A Gang at Work in Eastern Maine.

CALAIS, April 19. At Pembroke last night the stores of I. S. Lowe, dry goods, A. G. Levy, dry goods and groceries, and John Dudley, stoves and tinware, were burglarized. Entrance was effected by forcing the doors with a crowbar. Lowe's safe was blown open, probably with dynamite, and $600 taken. Four holes were drilled in the top of Levy's safe, but the burglars were probably frightened by the barking of a dog back of the store before they could finish the job. Dudley, Welch & Wilder's carriage factory, at West Pembroke, was broken into and the drills and crowbar taken from there were found in Lowe's store. Officers in the surrounding towns were notified but the thieves probably reached the border early this morning. It is the opinion of officers that the gang has been operating in Maine for the past two years.

AN OUTRAGEOUS AFFAIR.

The Work of a Tramp in Brewer.

A bold and outrageous piece of work was done by a tramp in Brewer Wednesday evening, and the perpetrator is evidently one of the worst characters of this class of human beings who roam about the country too lazy to work, sponging a living off those whom they meet with in their journeys. It seems that Wednesday evening Mrs. Charles G. Gliddon was sitting in in the sitting room of her house on Gliddon street, Brewer, she being alone at the time, when she heard a noise in the kitchen. She arose and went to the kitchen and found herself confronted by a tramp, who very coolly demanded something to eat. Mrs. Gliddon very kindly brought some food and placed it upon the table and told him to eat all he wished. She was standing but a few feet from him when he said something about having a kiss, and caught Mrs. Gliddon by the shoulder.

She drew herself quickly away and her dress about the arm and shoulder was badly torn. Freeing herself from his grasp she ran around the table, closely followed by the tramp. Suddenly she happened to think of her husband's revolver which had been left lying by him upon a shelf in the room, and quickly snatching this up she pointed it at her pursuer and pulled the trigger. The tramp uttered an exclamation as though he had been shot, but he made rapid tracks out of the kitchen door and the last seen of him he was flying over the fields as fast as he could run.

The shot did not strike the scoundrel, but went dangerously near him, into the wall of the house. Until after the time of the shooting Mrs. Gliddon felt no fear, but when it was all over she realized what a narrow escape she had had from an indignity and that it was only her presence of mind in defending herself with the revolver that had saved her. Her husband and the neighbors were informed of what had happened and a vigorous search was at once instituted to find the fellow, but their efforts were unsuccessful, and he has evidently left this vicinity lest he should meet with the punishment he so richly deserves. He may rest assured that he will meet with the reward he merits if he ever shows his countenance where he will be recognized. There are altogether too many tramps lurking about this city and suburbs and considerable complaint is heard about their impudence in various quarters. It behooves people to keep their doors locked, as there are liable to be one or more of these good for nothing specimens waiting for a chance to get in when they think they ... be ... seen by the ... people.

SERVICES ON FAST DAY.

FIRST CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

At the First Congregational church a union of the three Congregational and St. John's Episcopal churches was held. After the organ voluntary the congregation united in singing the doxology; invocation by Rev. C. H. Cutler; hymn by the congregation; responsive reading from the Psalms and Epistles; touching Christian fellowship and consecration; hymn, "Kindred in Christ a hearty welcome here receive"; Scripture reading and prayer by Rev. John McGaw Foster; hymn, "Christ, the Foundation," followed by the Apostle's Creed, in which the congregation joined; discourse by Rev. C. H. Cutler, text, Joshua 6:16, "The Lord hath given you the city," as follows: This is the age of cities. In our own country, one-fourth of the population are in cities, numbering 8,000 people and over. The Gospel was first preached in the city of Jerusalem, and afterwards in Athens, Rome and other cities. It has come now to be a question of vital moment to consider the power of the same Gospel in our cities.

In referring to our own city he showed by an estimate carefully made that in our thirteen protestant churches there were 2,015 persons in attendance on a given Sunday upon public worship, and that including those who were occasionally present, and the very young and old and sick, the number reached 4,000 who were connected with them. The Catholic population are estimated at 6,000, who are carefully looked after by their ministers. So the calling the population 18,000, and deducting 6,000 Catholics and 4,000 Protestants, there were 8,000, or two-thirds of our protestant population, who are not reached by any recognized church.

The preacher urged a more aggressive work and proposed co-operation of all the churches in some plan.

Reference was made to the work of the Y. M. C. A. and their need of a new building. The churches reach only 240 young men within their circle, which enforces the importance of the Association.

The impressive services were closed with prayer by Rev. G. W. Field, the singing of the hymn, "Bind the people, Lord, in union," and the benediction by Dr. Field.

PINE STREET METHODIST CHURCH.

A union service of the Baptists and Methodists was held at the Pine street Methodist church on Fast Day at 10.30 A. M., and the service was conducted by Revs. Heloy and Bustled, Revs. Lindsay, Rogers and Anthony being absent. The Scriptures were read by Rev. Mr. Bustled, and Rev. Mr. Haley offered prayer. Mr. Robert A. Jordan, Secretary of the Y. M. C. A. then read a paper upon "How to Reach the Masses."

The speaker considered it a good subject for the day, and said that it was important to think how we could improve, when we come to think of the energy that is expended upon money getting and how little upon Christian work. He did not wish to reflect upon the work of the churches, but thought that the masses should be reached in another manner than by giving them eloquent sermons and artistic music good as these are. The individual should be reached, and then the masses, who should be sought out, and not wait for them to seek. There is a field in our own midst and we need not go abroad to find it. Sound and intellectual agencies should be thrown around them, and a greater use of printed matter be made. He thought that novelties when properly used would be sanctified by God, and made to serve His purposes. The popular evening service with orchestral music, lively congregational singing, brief prayers, and testimony meetings; a week day evening service with magic lantern, sending home the Gospel truth through the eyes, were influences which would be felt, and be made impressive upon those who were seeking for the truth. Not the few, but the masses will be reached by novelties which are a power in themselves for good. At this time personal work is recognized, every business man has his commercial travellers, and its value to politicians is well known.

Personal work requires discretion and tact, but its results are great, and its influence widespread and lasting. That this work has not been well done is shown in the large number who know not God. If it should be done many would be brought to Christ who otherwise would remain in ignorance. A city has a name and character as well as an individual, and is capable of having a Christian character. Reference was made to the mysterious city of Norombega, and quotations were read from Whittier's poems. The address was very able and eloquent and closely listened to. The meeting closed with prayer and benediction.

AMUSEMENTS.

The Sorcerer.

Another success was scored by the Bangor Opera Company Thursday and last evenings by the presentation of Gilbert & Sullivan's opera, "The Sorcerer," and nothing but complimentary remarks have been heard from those who witnessed one or both performances in regard to the manner in which it was given. There is much musical talent in Bangor and the use to which this can be put when occasion demands has been well shown in the two performances of this week. Work upon this opera has been going on for some time and the rehearsals have been frequent and thorough, the musical part under the able direction of Mr. F. S. Davenport, and the stage business under the efficient care of Mr. F. A. Owen. The results have been a well trained chorus, fully acquainted with their parts and well balanced.

The usual delay and hesitation to be noted in most amateur performances was not a part of the presentation of "The Sorcerer," which passed off very smoothly and with excellent effect. One of the best effects was the disappearance to and reappearance from the lower regions. It caused much applause and laughter. The ... ance of the ladies and gentlemen were ... some, appropriate and effective. The ... of the opera, while not of the dash... of some comic operas, is full of ... melody and it was well rendered by ... soloists and choruses. The cast ... excellent one, and was strong in ... particular.

Her conception of the role was ... excellent piece of acting and she was ... graceful in her character. She received a bouquet of elegant flowers each night. Miss Harley added to her laurels already won as one of our most popular singers, and gave to her songs much expression. She sang with fine effect and the appreciation of the audience found expression in hearty applause. Her character of "Constance" was assumed with much naturalness. Mrs. Chase made an excellent "Lady ... gesture," and sang and ... said a very

Mr. Owen's abilities as a comedian were never shown to better advantage than in "The Sorcerer" and the proof was in the continued amusement which he created whenever before the audience. His topical song was a great hit, and he received recall after recall. He sang with excellent effect, and created much enthusiasm in his character of "J. Wellington Wells." Mr. Holden's mellow tenor voice was heard with much pleasure, and his character of "Alexis" was assumed in a most effective manner. His singing and acting were both highly commendable.

Mr. Moody was excellent as "Dr. Daly," and his conception of the character was a most true one. As usual he sang with fine effect. Mr. Dinsmore as "Sir Marmaduke Poindexter," was very good, and acted with the dignity befitting the part, and his singing was well received. Mr. McGinty as the "Notary" did very good work. Master Owen was received with much applause as "Ko Ko," Jr., and made a excellent hit.

The following were the members of the chorus: Misses Maggie Guthrie, Mary Stuart, Lizzie Lynch, Barbara Henry, May Small, Minnie Pooler, Lettie Washburn, Katie Perkins, Emily Tuck, May Jewell; Messrs. Roscoe Hillman, Geo. W. Chaplin, F. H. Davis, Geo. Wharff, Alfred McCusick, Chas Cayting, H. F. Whitman, Willis Royal, Wm. F. Stone, Elmer Cayting.

The Wilbur Opera Co.

Next Monday evening the Wilbur Opera Company will open a week's engagement at the Opera House by the presentation of "Two Vagabonds" (another form of "Pinafore"). A Philadelphia paper says of the company:

Among the many attractions that visit our city during the season none is more deservedly popular than the Wilbur Opera Company. During all of last week the popular regard for this organization was shown by crowded houses and those who hope to participate in the enjoyment this week would do well to go early and secure their seats. The company is formed of excellent material and the operas presented are put upon the stage in handsome style, the costumes of both principals and chorus being especially pretty. Susie Kirwin, the prima donna, possesses a beautiful voice, which she uses with taste and skill, and she is also blessed with a very pleasing presence.

MARRIAGE BELLS

A very pleasant social event occurred Thursday forenoon at the Unitarian church, the occasion being the marriage of the pastor, Rev. George Croswell Cressey, and Miss Lillian Mailing, of Brewer. The groom has been for a number of years the esteemed pastor of the Unitarian church and his talent in the pulpit has caused him to be regarded as one of the foremost of the preachers of this city. The bride is the daughter of William H. Mailing, Esq., of Brewer, and is a highly accomplished and charming young lady. A short time ago she was a member of the Unitarian choir and her rich contralto voice was a valuable addition. She has a very large circle of friends in Brewer and in this city, by whom she is held in high esteem.

Some time before the hour appointed for the ceremony, ten o'clock in the forenoon, the carriages containing the invited guests began to arrive at the church, and the way to the portals of the edifice was taken through a canopy which had been spread from the curbstone to the church entrance. The church was soon filled with a very large number of the leading people of this city, and when the time appointed for the ceremony to begin had arrived, there were but few seats unoccupied in the auditorium. The following gentlemen acted most efficiently as ushers. H. W. Plummer, W R Hunt, R. W. Stewart, H. P. Godfrey, F. E. Bradford and W. D. Bradford.

The altar was a mass of flowers and plants and presented a most beautiful sight. The centre of the altar was covered with a bank of cut flowers, and there was a profusion about the altar of elegant flowering potted plants, rare palms, century plants, orchids, callas, begonias, choice cut flowers and lilies. Nearly all of the floral decorations were from private hot houses, and the greater part was from Mrs. Caroline Eddy and Mr. Frederick A. Eddy. Mr. Thomas Allen supplied the cut flowers. The arrangement of the choice floral display was a most charming one, and much taste and judgment was used in making the beautiful effect. To the following ladies is due the credit of the arrangement: Mrs. H. L. Mitchell, Mrs. N. P. Kellogg, Mrs. H. McLaughlin, Mrs. F. A. Owen, Miss Hommenway and Miss Hammatt. The sunlight was excluded from the church, and the soft rays from the gas jets lighted the auditorium.

Soon after ten o'clock Miss Garland, the organist, began the wedding march and Rev. Mr. Cressey and the best man, Mr. E P Wentworth, of Portland, made their appearance and proceeded up the broad aisle upon the right to the altar where they awaited the bride. Nearly at the same time, Mr. H. W. Plummer, and Miss Mailing, a sister of the bride, and Miss Bennett advanced up the aisle upon the left. They were followed by the bride leaning upon the arm of her father, William H. Mailing, Esq., who gave her away. The costume of the bride was very beautiful and attractive. It consisted of a dress of cream colored, corded silk, trimmed with Duchesse lace with a long train, a long bridal vail and white satin slippers. In her hair were exquisite lilies of the valley. She carried a bouquet of beautiful roses. The bridal party took its station in front of the altar, and the ceremony was performed in a very impressive and felicitous manner by Rev. Mr. Bean, of Salem, Mass., New England Missionary of the Unitarian Society. At the conclusion of the marriage ceremony, the bridal party made its exit from the church by the aisle on the right, to the car
